2. We will be focusing on learning the Peking 32 Tai Chi Sword form, step by step. We will also be exploring core exercises designed to help understand flow and movement with the sword.

Other info

Please bring snacks and plenty of water for yourself. There will be a 30min break between 2:30 and 3pm.

Shorter breaks will be provided during the course of each workshop to give you a chance to recharge.

1pm-4pm Applications/ Pushhands

(All levels welcome. Participants should have moderate balance to attend this portion of the workshop)

This is the other half of Tai Chi, teaching us to bring a relaxed and centered disposition into a more dynamic and pressurized setting. The tool of Push/sensing hands and applications training gives us priceless feedback on how to progress further in our solo practice.

Its easy to deceive ourselves when we are our only source of feedback, which is why this leg of the training is such a powerful tool.

1. Grounding; the ability to redirect force down to the ground is a fundamental skill in Tai Chi and will be explored.

2. Sensitivity training through various push hands sets. Similar to the sword training from the morning, we learn to bring our awareness beyond ourselves, to incorporate, in this case, our training partner.
